Rocket ships may carry 'lams'

Scientists are studying a micro-organism green plant as a possible food for men journeying to the moon or Mars.

This one-cell plant, known as Chlorella, might be harvested from miniature "ferms" inside rocket ships hurtling through space. The plant would absorb carbon dioxide exhaled by passengers, and give off oxygen. Thus it would purify the air as well as supply food.

Chlorella is a member of the algae plant group that forms green strom and ponds, the National Geographic Society says. Laboratories grow it in vessels of water containing nitrogen, phosphorus, potassium, and other chemicals. Air charged with carbon dioxide is fed into the vessels, and the plants are kept well exposed to light. In several days, the Chlorella is ready to harvest.

The resulting food, in green paste, tastes something like raw spinach. It is one of the richest foods known to man. Grown in the proper solution, a few ounces of Chlorella could supply almost all of man's daily vitamin needs. Depending on the solution in which it grows, the Chlorella may be more than 50 percent protein or more than 70 percent fat.

Billions upon billions of Chlorella plants are needed to fill a quart jar, but the algae multiply at an amazing rate under proper conditions. Dr. Robert W. Kinsman of the University of Maryland reports some algae can double in numbers 12 times every day.

Of course, Chlorella might be used in soup-making and other industries. The plant can even be used to make gasoline or kerosene, because fermenting Chlorella releases methane gas, which can be converted into such liquid fuels. At present, however, such processes are too expensive for industry.

Curiously, the expense of providing carbon dioxide—one of the most common gases—is a big obstacle to commercial use of Chlorella. One solution might be to grow Chlorella in factories having carbon dioxide as a waste—or in association with sewage. Bacteria feeding on sewage releases carbon dioxide. Chlorella can supply oxygen to the bacteria, and in turn absorb the carbon dioxide. This method is being studied at the University of California, and may lead to the first commercial use of Chlorella.

The future of Chlorella will likely depend on basic research being done at universities and other institutions all over the world. University of Maryland biologists, for example, are conducting a wide range of experiments to answer such questions as: What is the optimum light intensity for growing algae? What is the effect of antibiotics on bacteria attacking algae?

For half a century Chlorella has been used for experiments in photosynthesis, the process by which a plant, using light for energy, manufactures food. Under laboratory conditions, Chlorella is remarkably efficient. A scientist has estimated that Chlorella growing on an acre only twice the size of Rhode Island would meet the protein needs of the entire world. Some scientists question Chlorella's potential as a food product, pointing out that experiments are made between Chlorella grown under the most prepared laboratory conditions and other plants grown with ordinary agricultural techniques. But scientists are convinced that what they are now learning about Chlorella may go a long way toward meeting the food and fuel needs of the world's mounting population.

MANUFACTURING

Manufacturers' shipments in January were over 3 percent lower than a year earlier. Largest drop was in the motor vehicle and related industries group; other declines were in export goods and intermediate goods and supplies groups. Consumer goods and heavy transportation groups were higher. Instead of the usual small increase, value of inventory owned by manufacturers at the end of January was slightly below the 1967 year-end value.

Interest in radio station here

Inquiry regarding possibility of establishing a radio station here has been received by Estevan Board of Trade.

A letter read at the Board's February meeting from Norman

Hickey of Grande Prairie, Alta., stated his interest in establishing a station in Estevan. He said the application for a licence was now before the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation Board of Governors. The Board of Trade passed a motion stating they supported the idea of a radio station in Estevan.

Following another discussion in which a desire was expressed for greater publicity of the Estevan area. In the daily press, a motion was passed that, owing to the lack of publicity in The Regina Leader-Post, the Board of Trade approach The Winnipeg Tribune regarding printing of a Saskatchewan section with a goodly portion of Estevan news, further requesting The Tribune to send a reporter here."—The Mercury, Estevan, March.

Polish Emigrés Add Distinction to Canadian Art Potters, Painters and Weavers

Canada's artists and craftsmen will have an opportunity this summer to display the cream of their wares in Europe's festival showcase which opens in Brussels on April 17th. One of the highlights of the textiles display will be the two tapestries above woven by the celebrated

Toronto artist Krystyn Sadowski. Donald Buchanan, head of the committee of selection and Sheila Gracie of the Canadian Design Centre, Ottawa, examine the tapestries prior to their shipment overseas.

Konrad and Krystyn Sadowski have been described as Polish by birth, cosmopolitan by experience, Canadian by choice and affection. They fled Poland after 1939, Konrad to join the Polish air force in exile, Krystyn to continue her studies in Paris. Later they escaped to England.

After the war the Sadowskis moved to Brazil where their work received wide acclaim in International Exhibitions. On invitation from the Province of Nova Scotia they emigrated to Canada, setting up their workshop first in Halifax, later moving inland to Toronto.

CARVING ON BOULDER FROM "SOUTHERN DEATH CULT"

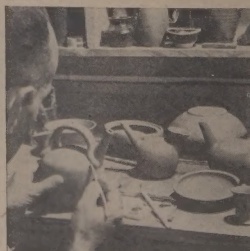

A large 600-pound boulder bearing a carving by early Indians has been identified as belonging to the Southern Death Cult at an archaeological complex, which flourished on the North American continent about 400 years ago, according to Boyd Watkinson, an archaeologist, presently working at the Saskatchewan Museum of Natural History.

Found near Weyburn, by Victor Minihall in June of 1955, the stone is at present outside the east entrance of a film museum. The carving, known as a petroglyph, is about two and one-half feet by one and one-half feet. It is believed by Mr. Watkinson to be related to an archaeological complex known as the Southern Death Cult.

Carved shell gorgets, and other items related to the Cult have also been found in Saskatchewan, although the stone is believed to be unique on the northern plains. The Death Cult is believed to have died out about 300 years ago, but there are records of its existence into the historic period in the central plains region.

Konrad, a master in the knowledge of clay, is a restless experimenter with new techniques for glazing and firing. The high standards which they set for themselves have enhanced appreciably the stature of the arts and crafts in Canada.

Konrad and Krystyn are an ideal husband and wife artistic team. Each is the perfect complement of the other, Konrad creating the designs for a wide variety of pottery articles, Krystyn's imagination supplying a rich flow of decorative motifs for them.

Oil in Galilee

Find brightens Israel's future

Discovery of a deep oil deposit in the northern province of Galilee may create a new economic frontier in this ancient Biblical land.

Oil already is gushing from wells in the north, and in 1955 in the Negev Desert. But now the brightens Israel's prospects for economic independence from foreign oil imports.

Mount Tabor in Galilee lies about 20 miles from the huge reservoir of Jewisha Mediterranean Sea. The oil fields are operating now at roughly a third of their full capacity as a result of long irrigation.

Galilee, where Jesus spent his boyhood and carried on much of his teaching, is a land of striking physical features, says the National Geographic Society.

Generally hilly, it is divided into vastness and lowlands that hold some of the most fertile soil in the world.

SAVED BY GRACE

Question — How is it possible for one's profession of faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and savior to be good only if it is not a true faith? I have heard that if we live a good life, we are all that matters.

Answer — Both are essential. Possession of God's grace necessarily provides the expression of it. We can't live the good life unless we have been born of God. "We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags" (Isaiah 64:6). When we repent of our sins and believe in Jesus Christ, we are forgiven and we receive power to keep the good life. (John 1:12). Then, therefore, faith, with the mouth confession is made manifest. For the Scripture saith: Whosoever believeth on Him, shall not be ashamed" (Romans 10:10).

The expression of the new life is daily living in just as important as the receiving of the new life. Hence, in concluding the sermon on the mount said: "Not every one that saith to me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven."

Therefore, whoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, shall enter into a new life. Every one who heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand, and he fell, and was destroyed, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and it fell; and great was the fall of it." (Matthew 7:21-27).

The acknowledging of Jesus Christ as your personal savior and the consequent following of his example in our daily lives are equally important. You can't be a Christian if you don't follow him. He is vital to your present and eternal salvation. But the receiving of the grace of God is not enough; the expressing of that grace in our daily living. We are saved by grace through faith. We shall continue our living, we are not to be sleeping His commandments.

Courage and faith needed

When such men as Bertrand Russell pointed that life on this planet may be extinct before the end of this century unless the manufacture of science's "ultimate" weapons of war is stopped, it is indeed difficult not to be an outright pessimist.

But for so long mankind has survived many other periods of bleak outlook. The only thing that has made it possible to keep on living is the courage and faith needed to carry on in the face of adversity. It is indeed difficult not to be an outright pessimist.

Prime Minister Dieffenbacher, assured of a large working majority in Parliament, will now be free to deal with anti-recession remedies on their merits. Economic quacks and opportunists may still confuse and mislead people by their demands and proposals. Government, however, will be under no compulsion to heed them. This being so, the Prime Minister and his colleagues have a superb opportunity to serve the national interest of Canada by adopting measures most likely to restore confidence and create a climate favorable to new investment.

Responsibility in this task primarily with Finance Minister Fleming. His budget speech, when it is made, will provide an occasion for outlining a plan for economic recovery that could set a pattern for public responsibility to economic matters.

Malting Barley for Irrigated Land

Lethbridge Experimental Station
Weekly Letter
B. A. WATSON, Cerealist

For several years tests have been conducted on malting varieties of barley in an attempt to find out whether or not it is possible to produce barley of good malting quality on irrigated land. The results show some consistent differences in quality characteristics between malting barley produced on irrigated land and that produced in the traditional dryland areas. However, grain quality produced on irrigated land appears to be within the acceptable range of quality.

Some varieties of grain, it is found, do not stand up as well as the better feed varieties, there is some assurance of a quality before any commercial production of such varieties is desirable. At the present time, contracts are being offered for the production of grain for use in malting barley. In some cases, irrigated grain is sought in southern Alberta, indicating a good market for this type of malting barley.

Hauschen is lower in yield and more susceptible to lodging than the better feed varieties. In terms of dollars per acre, Hauschen is not profitable to grow to feed. In terms of dollars per acre, Hauschen is not profitable to grow to feed. In terms of dollars per acre, Hauschen is not profitable to grow to feed.

Barley must meet strict standards of quality with regard to variety, soundness, purity, and chemical composition in order to be acceptable for malting. Consequently, sound cultural practices are required to produce a crop of malting quality. It appears that malting barley of suitable quality can be grown under irrigation and that a potential market exists. Thus, malting barley could become an important specialty crop on irrigated land in southern Alberta.

GRAIN TREATED WITH POISONOUS CHEMICALS

It is getting around to the time of year when some of the grain which has been treated and left over from feeding, is apt to find its way into the country elevator. Grain, so treated, is not safe for human consumption. Several years ago, reflecting the concern that was felt by the Board of Grain Commissioners of Canada, a revised regulation was issued under which every person who offers for storage or sale at a licensed elevator, any grain which has been treated with poisonous chemicals or compounds or with other poisonous materials, or grain mixed with other grain that has been so treated, is liable to a heavy penalty.

Elevator agents have again been warned to watch for and to refuse acceptance of any quantity of grain, of treated grain. Most of this is quite easy to detect by its odor. Producers can do much to prevent the use of treated grain which has been treated, does not become mixed with other grain that is to be delivered. A few barrels in a carload are sufficient to condemn the whole carload as unfit for human consumption and to prevent the grain being unloaded at a terminal elevator. That grain apart from the loss of the grain as food, heavy financial losses may result in cases where elevator containing evidence of treated seed are rejected.

C.N.R. Earnings

Operative revenues of the Canadian National Railway for the month of February, 1958, amounted to $52,242,000. Expenses, taxes and rents totalled $57,983,000, resulting in a net operating income deficiency for the month of $5,740,000.

In February, 1957, operating revenues were $64,993,000; expenses, taxes and rents were $61,532,000 and net operating income was $3,461,000. These figures do not include any provision for fixed charges.

A shallow tailwind seldom makes a deep impression.

Record Hail Losses

According to the Saskatchewan Mutual Hail Insurance Association, 1957 was the worst hail year in history of that province. The association paid losses amounting to $4,620,000. This was 11 percent of all the hail insurance written and more than double the $2,300,000 collected in premiums. Two major and 71 lesser storms during the 119-day hail season accounted for 10,875 claims.
